Person-First Language

- Place the person before the disability. Say "person with a disability" rather than "disabled person."

- Avoid referring to people by the disability they have, i.e., "An epileptic," "a quadriplegic." A person is not a condition. Rather, refer to "a person with epilepsy" or "people with quadriplegia."

Person-First Language

- People are not "bound" or "confined" to wheelchairs. They use them to increase their mobility and enhance their freedom. It is more accurate to say "wheelchair user" or "person who uses a wheelchair."

Person with a Physical Disability

- Never move someone's crutches, walker, cane, or other mobility aid without permission.
- When speaking to a person using a wheelchair for more than a few minutes, try to find a seat for yourself so the two of you are at eye level.

Person with a Visual Disability

- Identify yourself when you approach a person who is blind. If a new person approaches, introduce him or her.
- It is appropriate to touch the person's arm lightly when you speak so that he or she knows you are speaking to him or her.
- Face the person and speak directly to him or her. Use a normal tone of voice.

Person with a Visual Disability

- Don't leave without saying you are leaving.
- If you are offering directions, be as specific as possible, and point out obstacles in the path of travel. Use clock cues ("the door is at 2 o'clock").
- Alert people who are blind or visually impaired to posted information.
Person with a Visual Disability

• Never pet or otherwise distract a guide dog unless the owner has given you permission.

• You may offer assistance if it seems needed, but if your offer is declined, do not insist. If your offer is accepted, ask the person how you can best help.

Person with a Speech Disability

• Talk to people with speech disabilities as you would talk to anyone else.

• Be friendly - start up a conversation

• Be patient - it may take the person a while to answer.

• Give the person your undivided attention.

Person with a Speech Disability

• Ask the person for help in communicating with him or her. If the person uses a communication device, such as a manual or electronic communication board, ask the person how to best use it.

• Speak in your regular tone of voice.
Person with a Speech Disability

• Tell the person if you do not understand what he or she is trying to say. Ask the person to repeat the message, spell it, tell you in a different way, or write it down.

• To obtain information quickly, ask short questions that require brief answers or a head nod. However, try not to insult the person's intelligence with over-simplification.

Person with a Cognitive Disability

• Treat adults with cognitive disabilities as adults.

• When speaking to someone who has a cognitive disability, try to be alert to their responses so that you can adjust your method of communication, if necessary.

• Use language that is concrete rather than abstract. Be specific, without being too simplistic.

Person with a Cognitive Disability

• People with brain injuries may have short-term memory deficits and may repeat themselves or require information to be repeated.

• People with auditory perceptual problems may need to have directions repeated, and may take notes to help them remember directions or the sequence of tasks. They may benefit from watching a task demonstrated.
Person with a Cognitive Disability

- People with perceptual or "sensory overload" problems may become disoriented or confused if there is too much to absorb at once. Provide information gradually and clearly. Reduce background noise if possible.

- Repeat information using different wording or a different communication approach if necessary. Allow time for the information to be fully understood.

Person with a Cognitive Disability

- Don't pretend to understand if you do not. Ask the person to repeat what was said.

- In conversation, people with mental retardation may respond slowly, so give them time. Be patient, flexible, and supportive.

Person with a Cognitive Disability

- Some people who have a cognitive disability may be easily distracted. Try not to interpret distraction as rudeness.

- Do not expect all people to be able to read well. Some people may not read at all.
Person with a Hearing Disability

• Ask the person how he or she prefers to communicate.

• If you are speaking through an interpreter, remember that the interpreter may lag a few words behind - especially if there are names or technical terms to be fingerspelled - so pause occasionally to allow him or her time to translate completely and accurately.

Person with a Hearing Disability

• Talk directly to the person who is deaf or hard of hearing, not to the interpreter.

• Before you start to speak, make sure you have the attention of the person you are addressing. A wave, a light touch on the shoulder, or other visual or tactile signals are appropriate ways of getting the person's attention.

• Speak in a clear, expressive manner. Do not over-enunciate or exaggerate words.

Person with a Hearing Disability

• Unless you are specifically requested to do so, do not raise your voice. Speak in a normal tone; do not shout.

• To facilitate speechreading, face into the light, and keep your hands and other objects away from your mouth.

• If the person is speechreading, face the person directly and maintain eye contact.
Person with a Hearing Disability

- While you are writing a message for someone who is deaf or hard of hearing, don't talk, since the person cannot read your note and your lips at the same time.

- If you do not understand something that is said, ask the person to repeat it or to write it down. The goal is communication; do not pretend to understand if you do not.

Person with a Hearing Disability

- If you know any sign language, try using it. It may help you communicate, and it well at least demonstrate your interest in communicating and your willingness to try.
